Abstract

READ ONLINE

Abstract Violence and inequalities suffered by Central American women force their migration. Once migration has begun, they are exposed to greater violence because migrants, for mestizo, women and, sometimes, minors. The journey space in violence. Central Americans, particularly women, are exposed to violence by criminals. Orderly and regular mobility would protect them from the violence to which they are exposed; to this end, migration governance is needed. This analysis with intersectionality as a theoretical approach and the methodology used was based on interviews and a bibliographic review.
